"I am from the Midwest and was always one of the only Jewish kids in my grade of over five hundred. I was often the target of anti-Semitism and eventually hid my religion from those around me. I went to my new teacher retreat when I moved to the Bay and was asked, "Tell us one thing you don't tell most people?" My response was that I was Jewish. I was presented with blank stares, and then almost half of the people responded, "So am I." I finally felt seen and welcome."
